Bad luck to the UK lads, who will be out of the competition if France beat Hungary tomorrow.

Now onto the ladies, they faced off against previous runners-up, Norway. Results below:

This result has just confirmed everyones worst nightmares. In desperate attempts to keep the gaming community growing the people who are trying hardest to improve it are actually ruining it.

How can major players in the UK scene play in a NATIONS CUP whilst competing very hard at lans once a month for one of, if not the largest UK event (UKT) there will be this year?

If we didnt have such a stupidly large amount of Nations cups then this wouldnt be an issue because teams could allow for there players to prepare properly for such a huge thing to be involved in. At first when 4Kings players turned down the opportunity to play for there country i couldnt believe it. But when this already the second Nations cup this year?? The feeling cant be as great.

All in all, this for me calls for a period in the year where leagues have a close season?? Much like EVERY other sport. And as for the Nation cup debacle... At the very most ONCE A YEAR. sort it out cb

I was not looking to make a big point about ability here. I was looking to point out that the UK's performance was seriously damaged by the fact we had major players missing due to the frequency and timing of the Nations Cup.
